

Adults Help Children Fix Mistakes

All people make mistakes. When children make mistakes, adults are often there to help.

There are many ways that children make mistakes. They may spill things, drop things, forget to do something, lose something, mis-spell a word, or say or do something unkind. There are many other kinds of mistakes, too.

Adults know a lot about mistakes. They fix many mistakes quickly on their own. Other times they stop and think. Sometimes they work with others to fix mistakes.

Adults know many ways to fix mistakes. When children make mistakes, adults are often there to help children learn from them.

Adults show children how to quickly fix some mistakes. When children spill something, adults show them how to clean it up. That way, children learn how to fix mistakes like that on their own.

Children often make mistakes when they practice new skills. Adults help children think and fix mistakes on schoolwork.

With some mistakes, it helps to stop and think. When this happens, adults may tell children to stop what they are doing and go to a quiet place to think about the mistake. Adults stay close by to help.

Learning makes me smarter than I was before! As I grow, adults will help me learn from my mistakes. They will show me how to fix many kinds of mistakes.
